Newspaper Advertising Has Helped to Put Home-Making and Home-Management on a Business Basis!

Quietly, imperceptibly a great change has been going on in "the biggest business in the world"—that of home-making.

Time was when a housewife's natural inclination to thrift, based upon a fair judgment of values in shopping, constituted her sole equipment as a "buyer" of household necessities. She depended upon her own observation of the stores, and upon hints of neighbors and acquaintances as to "special sales" or special buying opportunities in this or that store. She rarely read the store "ads." Somehow she felt that they were a necessary part of the newspaper, but that they had no special significance or value to her, personally.

Urged, perhaps by a timely hint in the newspaper itself, she commenced to read the store "ads" with a view to learning whether or not they were really important to her—whether or not they would help her to buy more wisely, even at the stores with which she was most familiar.

This tendency to "test" the value of ad-reading has been a general one; and it is safe to say that no woman who has ever made the test has failed to make ad-reading a part of her "business routine" thenceforth.

For she soon discovers that the "ads" have a NEWS VALUE—they give her facts AT FIRST HAND, where she had depended upon chance gossip or chance visits to the stores for them. After she has acquired the habit of studying the "ads" she would no more think of abandoning it than of neglecting to read the news columns of her home paper, and depending upon person-to-person gossip for her information as to what is going on in the world.

Thus, studying the "ads," she comes to know the NEWS of the STORE-WORLD—to keep in touch with buying opportunities—to make of her buying for the home a real, practical "business matter."
